The Kind You Have Always Bought

Spiritual Militancy.

After all, it is not the tactics of the English militants that concern us; and their present, single-hearted goal, "Votes for Women," is near and insignificant compared with the stretches that lie beyond that simple, first step. Many wom-en of this generation will stop short, in their path to self-realization, with their enfranchisement, calling it a good fight won, and the battle ended. Others will discover, as men have discovered, that the ballot is a clumsy method of gaining what they want, and will seek, as many men are seeking, other and better ways. Our concern is not with militant tacties or with its first goal. But we are greatconcerned with the militant spirit that is developing in these and many other women. For, of all the evils in the world, the helplessness of women is the greatest; not their material or political helplessness, but their spiritual helplessness, upon which all their other inaptiudes gather like barnacles. This spiritnal militancy in women is the ringing. inging note of the world to-day, and what lies back of it and what lies ahead may not wisely be ignored.-From "The Militant Woman," in November Century.

A Short List of Human Bores.

In the November Woman's Home Companion appears an article e. filled "Lit-tle Courtesies of Social Life," in the course of which the author mentions, as follows, a few people who make nuis-ances of themselves:

"Other discourtesies you meet in private as well as in public. Do we not all know the man or woman who takes up a book or paper and reads while others in the circle are talking? Do we not meet every day the persons who discuss together people and places and things they know and we don't? Does any one of us escape the trial of the interrupter who breaks in upon our best story with an irrelevant remark, or who snaps our most telling argument in two to interject some comment, humorous or otherwise! Or of the chronic story-teller who can hardly wait for the conclusion of our aneedote because of his eagerness to cap it with one he believes bet-
